This photograph shows an archaeological excavation. At the top, a horizontal stone wall or foundation is visible, constructed from large, roughly-hewn blocks of reddish-brown stone. Below this wall, a large pile of smaller, rounded and angular stones of similar color is scattered across the ground. A red and white striped measuring tape is laid horizontally across the middle of the image, just above the pile of stones. A small black label with white text is placed on the tape. The ground is a uniform reddish-brown color, likely soil or sand.
